CIVIC SPACE

The situation report, Civil Society in West Africa, is a research tool built by civil society. It aims to inform policymakers and citizens about the state of civic engagement in West Africa.

CIVIL SOCIETY IN WEST AFRICA,

One of the main pillars of democracy, elections, is a constant cause for tension in West Africa. In the last few months, the Civicus Monitor Update has reported on protesters in Togo, Guinea, Niger and Mali.

Civil society across the region engages in various advocacy efforts both directed towards power holders and the general public. In West Africa, the Civicus Monitor Update has reported on protestors in Togo, Guinea, Niger and Mali.

The postponement of the presidential and National Assembly elections nationwide, resulting in the non-fulfillment of the government's promise to Nigerians, has been widely reported. The movement have promised to continue until the government achieves the objective of self-determination.

On February 18, local activists took part in a training session on citizen oversight tools for public management experts, diplomatic corps, international development partners, political leaders and civil society. The gathering was scheduled to take place at the Transcorp Hilton Hotel in Abuja on February 7, 2019.

Peace Committee. The conference was themed “How can we prevent election violence in West Africa?” and was attended by activists, journalistic specialists in public procurement issues, diplomats and members of the international community. Participants were drawn from a cross section of the community, including members of the diplomatic corps, non-governmental organizations, media representatives and grassroots activists.

Participants were drawn from a cross section of the community, including members of the diplomatic corps, non-governmental organizations, media representatives and grassroots activists. The conference was opened by Togolese journalist Alioune Djenda, executive director of the Union des ONG du Togo (UONGTO). The event was moderated by a specialist in corporate social responsibility.

In line with the activities of the Pan-African Confederation of Journalists Against Violence (PACJA), the event aimed to encourage the network among civil society organizations in Côte d'Ivoire to be efficient, to provide space for networking between civil society organizations, and to raise awareness of civil society organizations, the media and local communities on clitic issues.

The conference was opened by Togolese journalist Alioune Djenda, executive director of the Union des ONG du Togo (UONGTO). The event was moderated by a specialist in corporate social responsibility.

One of the main pillars of democracy, elections, is a constant cause for tension in West Africa. In the last few months, the Civicus Monitor Update has reported on protesters in Togo, Guinea, Niger and Mali.

Civil society across the region engages in various advocacy efforts both directed towards power holders and the general public. In West Africa, the Civicus Monitor Update has reported on protestors in Togo, Guinea, Niger and Mali.

The postponement of the presidential and National Assembly elections nationwide, resulting in the non-fulfillment of the government's promise to Nigerians, has been widely reported. The movement have promised to continue until the government achieves the objective of self-determination.

On February 18, local activists took part in a training session on citizen oversight tools for public
management experts, diplomatic corps, international development partners, political leaders and civil society. The gathering was scheduled to take place at the Transcorp Hilton Hotel in Abuja on February 7, 2019.

Peace Committee. The conference was themed “How can we prevent election violence in West Africa?” and was attended by activists, journalistic specialists in public procurement issues, diplomats and members of the international community. Participants were drawn from a cross section of the community, including members of the diplomatic corps, non-governmental organizations, media representatives and grassroots activists.

Participants were drawn from a cross section of the community, including members of the diplomatic corps, non-governmental organizations, media representatives and grassroots activists. The conference was opened by Togolese journalist Alioune Djenda, executive director of the Union des ONG du Togo (UONGTO). The event was moderated by a specialist in corporate social responsibility.

In line with the activities of the Pan-African Confederation of Journalists Against Violence (PACJA), the event aimed to encourage the network among civil society organizations in Côte d'Ivoire to be efficient, to provide space for networking between civil society organizations, and to raise awareness of civil society organizations, the media and local communities on clitic issues.

The conference was opened by Togolese journalist Alioune Djenda, executive director of the Union des ONG du Togo (UONGTO). The event was moderated by a specialist in corporate social responsibility.

One of the main pillars of democracy, elections, is a constant cause for tension in West Africa. In the last few months, the Civicus Monitor Update has reported on protesters in Togo, Guinea, Niger and Mali.

Civil society across the region engages in various advocacy efforts both directed towards power holders and the general public. In West Africa, the Civicus Monitor Update has reported on protestors in Togo, Guinea, Niger and Mali.

The postponement of the presidential and National Assembly elections nationwide, resulting in the non-fulfillment of the government's promise to Nigerians, has been widely reported. The movement have promised to continue until the government achieves the objective of self-determination.

On February 18, local activists took part in a training session on citizen oversight tools for public
management experts, diplomatic corps, international development partners, political leaders and civil society. The gathering was scheduled to take place at the Transcorp Hilton Hotel in Abuja on February 7, 2019.

Peace Committee. The conference was themed “How can we prevent election violence in West Africa?” and was attended by activists, journalistic specialists in public procurement issues, diplomats and members of the international community. Participants were drawn from a cross section of the community, including members of the diplomatic corps, non-governmental organizations, media representatives and grassroots activists.

Participants were drawn from a cross section of the community, including members of the diplomatic corps, non-governmental organizations, media representatives and grassroots activists. The conference was opened by Togolese journalist Alioune Djenda, executive director of the Union des ONG du Togo (UONGTO). The event was moderated by a specialist in corporate social responsibility.

In line with the activities of the Pan-African Confederation of Journalists Against Violence (PACJA), the event aimed to encourage the network among civil society organizations in Côte d'Ivoire to be efficient, to provide space for networking between civil society organizations, and to raise awareness of civil society organizations, the media and local communities on clitic issues.

The conference was opened by Togolese journalist Alioune Djenda, executive director of the Union des ONG du Togo (UONGTO). The event was moderated by a specialist in corporate social responsibility.

One of the main pillars of democracy, elections, is a constant cause for tension in West Africa. In the last few months, the Civicus Monitor Update has reported on protesters in Togo, Guinea, Niger and Mali.

Civil society across the region engages in various advocacy efforts both directed towards power holders and the general public. In West Africa, the Civicus Monitor Update has reported on protestors in Togo, Guinea, Niger and Mali.

The postponement of the presidential and National Assembly elections nationwide, resulting in the non-fulfillment of the government's promise to Nigerians, has been widely reported. The movement have promised to continue until the government achieves the objective of self-determination.

On February 18, local activists took part in a training session on citizen oversight tools for public
management experts, diplomatic corps, international development partners, political leaders and civil society. The gathering was scheduled to take place at the Transcorp Hilton Hotel in Abuja on February 7, 2019.

Peace Committee. The conference was themed “How can we prevent election violence in West Africa?” and was attended by activists, journalistic specialists in public procurement issues, diplomats and members of the international community. Participants were drawn from a cross section of the community, including members of the diplomatic corps, non-governmental organizations, media representatives and grassroots activists.

Participants were drawn from a cross section of the community, including members of the diplomatic corps, non-governmental organizations, media representatives and grassroots activists. The conference was opened by Togolese journalist Alioune Djenda, executive director of the Union des ONG du Togo (UONGTO). The event was moderated by a specialist in corporate social responsibility.

In line with the activities of the Pan-African Confederation of Journalists Against Violence (PACJA), the event aimed to encourage the network among civil society organizations in Côte d'Ivoire to be efficient, to provide space for networking between civil society organizations, and to raise awareness of civil society organizations, the media and local communities on clitic issues.

The conference was opened by Togolese journalist Alioune Djenda, executive director of the Union des ONG du Togo (UONGTO). The event was moderated by a specialist in corporate social responsibility.

One of the main pillars of democracy, elections, is a constant cause for tension in West Africa. In the last few months, the Civicus Monitor Update has reported on protesters in Togo, Guinea, Niger and Mali.

Civil society across the region engages in various advocacy efforts both directed towards power holders and the general public. In West Africa, the Civicus Monitor Update has reported on protestors in Togo, Guinea, Niger and Mali.

The postponement of the presidential and National Assembly elections nationwide, resulting in the non-fulfillment of the government's promise to Nigerians, has been widely reported. The movement have promised to continue until the government achieves the objective of self-determination.

On February 18, local activists took part in a training session on citizen oversight tools for public
management experts, diplomatic corps, international development partners, political leaders and civil society. The gathering was scheduled to take place at the Transcorp Hilton Hotel in Abuja on February 7, 2019.

Peace Committee. The conference was themed “How can we prevent election violence in West Africa?” and was attended by activists, journalistic specialists in public procurement issues, diplomats and members of the international community. Participants were drawn from a cross section of the community, including members of the diplomatic corps, non-governmental organizations, media representatives and grassroots activists.

Participants were drawn from a cross section of the community, including members of the diplomatic corps, non-governmental organizations, media representatives and grassroots activists. The conference was opened by Togolese journalist Alioune Djenda, executive director of the Union des ONG du Togo (UONGTO). The event was moderated by a specialist in corporate social responsibility.

In line with the activities of the Pan-African Confederation of Journalists Against Violence (PACJA), the event aimed to encourage the network among civil society organizations in Côte d'Ivoire to be efficient, to provide space for networking between civil society organizations, and to raise awareness of civil society organizations, the media and local communities on clitic issues.

The conference was opened by Togolese journalist Alioune Djenda, executive director of the Union des ONG du Togo (UONGTO). The event was moderated by a specialist in corporate social responsibility.